Program of Study

The B.A. program in South Asian studies offers students an opportunity to study a major world civilization from the perspective of the social sciences. At the same time, humanities courses constitute a significant part of the program: students are required to take at least one year of a South Asian language and are required to take the South Asian civilization sequence; students may include humanities and Divinity School courses either as required or as elective courses. Although advanced work in the program (upper-level course work and B.A. paper) is expected to be oriented to social science concerns and methodologies, today's permeable boundaries between the social sciences and the humanities open the way to course work and B.A. projects that integrate the two perspectives.

Program Requirements

The concentration program requires eleven courses and a B.A. paper. Required courses include: (1) the South Asian civilization sequence (SALC 20100-20200); (2) three courses in a South Asian language, the level depending on prior achievement and on how the College Language Requirement is met; (3) three courses in the social sciences, preferably from a single discipline; and (4) three electives, preferably courses that strengthen the disciplinary emphasis or reading courses for the B.A. paper. Students should discuss their choice of an appropriate language sequence with the chairperson of undergraduate studies early in their program of study.

Bachelor's Paper. All candidates for the B.A. degree in South Asian studies are required to write a bachelor's paper of approximately thirty pages in length. Although they may choose to begin their project earlier, students must initiate work on their B.A. paper no later than the beginning of Autumn Quarter of their senior year. Students are expected to work with a faculty supervisor and to consult the chairperson of undergraduate studies about the suitability of their project.

Grading. The eight nonelective courses in the South Asian studies program must be taken for quality grades.

Honors. The decision of the award of honors is not made on the basis of any formal program. Students who wish to compete for honors should see the concentration chair.
